"Wagner takes rank among the Frentest batsmen in history. When he hit 300 for 17 successive seasons he hung up a record that may endure for all time. And now, in his 42d year, a decade beyond the end of the average major leaguer's life, Wagner is battling with the youngsters for the leadership of the leagues. Isn't that the absolute proof of his hitting provess?

"Wagner, in the history of his career, had few equals as a base runner. Big and awkward, it seemed like folly for him to attempt the theft of a bag—it looked like sure death. Yet, if you peruse the baseball records, you will find that Wagner's base stealing average, covering all of his 20 years as a big leaguer, shows something like 40 pilfers a season—a record superior to that turned in by 55 per cent. of the men who have played the game at one time or another during the last 40 years.
